Professor Xia Baishu, PhD, is Vice President of Shenyang Jianzhu University, China, and a doctoral supervisor. He is a recipient of the State Council Special Allowance of China.

His research focuses on green building, urban regeneration, and sustainable urban development. He has led and participated in more than 20 major research projects funded by national programmes and contributed to over 120 architectural design and urban development projects. His work has received more than 50 national and professional awards.

Professor Xia also serves in several leading academic roles within the Architectural Society of China and is recognised for his contributions to architectural innovation and urban planning.